FOOT and LEG IDIOMS:

Read the paragraph. From the context, figure out what the underlined idiom means. Then answer the question when there is one.

1. The parents want classes to start earlier so they can get to work by eight. The teachers don't want to begin school that early. We asked Mr. Jones to come to the meeting to discuss the issue because he has a foot in both camps. He is a teacher at the school, but his daughter also attends the school.

Have you ever been in a situation where you had a foot in two groups who opposed each other on something?

2. My whole family went to a restaurant this weekend. My dad surprised us all by footing the bill for the whole group. We were very glad because the food was expensive.

Who usually foots the bill when your extended family goes out to dinner?

3. I got a job working as a secretary for Dell. It's not the job I want, but at least I have a foot in the door. I can meet people who can help me get the job I really want.

Is taking a job with less responsibility and less pay than the job you really want a good idea if it helps you get your foot in the door? Or do you run the risk of being stuck in the low level job forever?

4. Clair and I got off on the wrong foot when we first met. She insisted I go with her to get a cup of coffee, but I had another appointment and had to leave right away. She thought I just didn't want to be with her. But later we straightened everything out and we are good friends now.

Tell about a time when you got off on the wrong foot with someone.

5. I put my foot in my mouth today. I was complaining to my classmates about how all dentists overcharge their patients. It turns out one of my classmates was a dentist and he got really angry.

Tell about a time when you put your foot in your mouth.

6. My daughter insisted on going on a date with an older boy at her school. But I put my foot down and told her she was not allowed to date until she was 16.

What things do you put your foot down about in your household? What did your parents put their foot down about?

7. I really dread my father-in-law visiting. He is from a different age when the older men in the family were pampered. He expects me to wait on him hand and foot.

Is there anyone in your family who expects to be waited on hand and foot?

8. I used to hate it when people asked me not to smoke in front of them. But now the shoe is on the other foot. I quit smoking and I really don't like to be around people who smoke.

B. That sounds like something Jack would say. He's pulling your leg. He likes to do that with all the new employees.

USING "ACTUALLY"

Actually means real, really or in fact. We use it to make things clearer.

Joe: I heard you got a job with Dell working in sales.

James: Actually, I got a job in the sales department, but I'm not a salesman. I'm just answering the phone when customers call in with questions about our products.

Joe: It's almost 200 miles to Dallas.

James: Actually it's 180 miles.

The book says she died at 67, but she actually died at 75.

Some languages use actual and actually in a different way.

They might say, "Our actual financial position is good." We would say, "Our current financial position is good."

They might say, "In 1900, the population of London was higher than it actually is." We would say, "higher than it is now"
