

1. Read these excerpts from FUNNY IN FARSI, a book about being an immigrant in America. Explain the meaning of the underlined phrases. Then answer the questions.

Perhaps it's unfair to judge any place during spring break. After all, the students who flock to these resorts are generally not the brightest lights in the American galaxy. These are people for whom a vacation doesn't begin until they have thrown up a couple of times. It seems like such a waste for them to fly to the Bahamas, or anywhere else, since they can just as easily go to a motel in their own neck of the woods and simply pass out for a week. It would serve this country better if these types could have their passports stamped "Domestic Travel Only", thereby limiting the damage they do as national embarrassments.

1. Did you have "spring break" when you were in college? What did you usually do on spring break?
2. Did you study abroad?
3. What was your favorite entertainment while in college?
4. Have you ever seen spring break students behaving badly?

My father's favorite spot on Planet Earth is Las Vegas. As a child, I had to endure endless vacations to that den of sin in the desert. Whenever a three day weekend rolled around, my father would happily announce, "We're going to Las Vegas!" I hated it, but Las Vegas was cheap and so was my father.

1. Where was your favorite vacation spot as a kid?
2. Where is your favorite vacation spot now?
3. What does she mean when she says her father was "cheap"?

Once my father decides how to vote on all the issues, he then practices democracy with a dash of dictatorship thrown in for good measure. He tells my mother how she should vote.
