Discuss these cases in your group and decide what you should do.

1. The male head of the warehouse in your company is very competent and has been a loyal company employee for years. However, there are many women working in the warehouse now and they have complained that the warehouse manager should be fired because he keeps a calendar of topless women in his office. He also calls the female employees "cutie" and doesn't assign any tasks to them that require lifting heavy boxes. Should you fire him?

2. The best applicant for the manager's job in a foreign subsidiary is a woman, but the culture of that country makes it difficult for local men to accept being subordinate to a woman. Should you appoint a woman to the job and force the men to accept her or should you appoint a less qualified applicant?

3. The best applicant for the manager position is a man, but you feel like you should hire the woman who is not as well qualified because your company has few women managers. What should you do?

Questions for discussion:
