Students, read aloud these paragraphs about coffee and coffee culture. Explain the meaning of the underlined vocabulary.

COFFEE AND COFFEE CULTURE

Some people might say Americans are obsessed with coffee. In the U.S., the number of specialty coffee shops has increased greatly over the past few years. In 1995, there were an estimated five thousand shops and sellers specializing in coffee. By 2006, there were almost 24,000.

It's hard to walk down a street without encountering a coffee shop. And chances are, that coffee shop might be a Starbucks. The Starbucks company started in the west coast city of Seattle in 1991. They sell specialty coffee drinks like Frappucinos and White Chocolate Mocha. Starbucks has been pivotal in spreading the coffee culture into people's daily lives.

But many people criticize the aggressive expansion of the Starbucks change. Smaller, independent coffee shops sometimes find it difficult to compete with this large chain.

Research shows that as many as one-third of the people in the world drink coffee. Some people like it for its rich smell and taste. Others like the stimulating effect of caffeine, a chemical in coffee.

Coffee trees are native to east Africa and areas of the Arabian peninsula. It was first grown for profit and traded in the fifteenth century. Most coffee came from what is now Yemen. Soon, coffee was in high demand all over the Middle East. By the seventeenth century, coffee had been introduced to Europe. The Dutch brought coffee plants to the islands of Indonesia. Gradually coffee plants were introduced to many parts of the world. Today most of the world's production comes from Central and South America. Brazil is the world's largest producer of coffee in the world. Coffee is the second most traded commodity in the world after oil.
